| This program has been under-producing for many years and with overall lower enrollments in the program as part of a national trend in the field, the department cannot sustain offering a robust program at this level. After careful deliberations with the graduate coordinator, other campus stakeholders, and having a majority consensus of the committee of the whole of the members of the Department of History and Geography, the chair concurred that the department and our students would be best served by deactivating the program and re-focusing our energies toward our undergraduate offerings. The students who remain in the program will be accommodate in the completion of their degrees through a combination of independent study and combined undergraduate-graduate course options. | |
